Hey Friend,

It’s been one month since #NewHarvest2019 and after taking a few weeks to sober up from the high of seeing so many New Harvest community members together, we at New Harvest HQ have collectively agreed that it was our best conference yet.

More than two thirds of the audience was new and we had unprecedented student attendance, a true testament to the growth of our fellowship program.

If you attended the conference, either in person or by live streaming from home, it would mean a lot to us if you filled out the survey below :)
I'm excited to share analytics about the conference from Slido, the audience engagement tool we use each year to allow audience members to submit, upvote, and downvote Q&A questions all from their phones.

- We had 429 active Slido users, 100+ of which were remote
- Attendees asked 566 questions with a total of 2,702 likes and 656 dislikes

Check out our blog post for further analytics from Slido's interaction report and the archive of all Slido submissions.

The biggest takeaway was that a lot of you live streamed the conference! We had 429 active users but only 300 people in the room, tops, at any given time. 100+ live stream Slido users was way more than we expected 😯

POST-CONFERENCE PHOTOS, LIVESTREAM, & MORE

- View and add your own conference photos. You can view the official photos from our photographer, David Chuchuca, in this facebook album, google photo album, and google drive folder.

  I would love to see your photos! Email them to meera@new-harvest.org or add them to our community google album yourself.

- Watch the #NewHarvest2019 livestream. The YouTube live stream is still up on our You Tube channel. We will be taking it down once the recordings of selected talks are edited, so watch or download the live stream now before it's too late.

- Complete survey. Your feedback is important to us! Completing the survey will help Isha, Lanto, Kate, and I make changes in our programming to best serve the cell ag community's evolving needs.

- Read Kevin's recap of his very first New Harvest conference, as well as recaps from New Food Economy, Thought For Food, AgFunder, The Good Food Institute, and ProVeg.

- Vote for the cellular agriculture panel to be included at SXSW 2020!

WHAT WE'RE READING
- We are loving this article by Jan Dutkiewicz in Jacobin about the importance of the public sector in sustaining ongoing innovation in cellular agriculture and building a just agricultural economy of cell-based foods.

- While we have nothing to add to the Popeyes discourse, our Brooklyn office is next door to a Popeyes and in our foyer sits a vintage Popeyes sign. We don't know why, but given the strange history of our building, it's not entirely unexpected.

- Here at New Harvest, we are so saturated by Winston Churchill's prophetic description of cell ag that we can forget about the many futures of food people people aspired to, fell short of, and abandoned before us. It's always fun when Twitter's algorithm feeds us tidbits of food history like this 👍🐟
In 1961, a group of lawmakers touted fish flour as a wonder-food that could solve world hunger AND defeat communism. They said it could "convince the hungry hordes of the uncommitted nations of the world that the US is genuinely... interested in their welfare." So what happened?

The plot thickens! Fish flour struggled live up to it's lofty promises because the FDA rejected the use of whole fish in the product, stating that ingredients like intestines and eyeballs were considered "filth". Clipping from Medford Mail Tribune, 17 Oct 1957 #FoodHistory
